According to Haaretz, Baloul represented the Palestinian Authority when American families brought a case against them arguing that they had paid off terrorists.

“Gassan Baloul, a lawyer for the defendants, said in an email they were gratified that the appeals court accepted their "consistent position" that U.S. courts lacked jurisdiction. ...

The families had sought to hold the Palestinian Authority and PLO liable for six shootings and bombings between 2002 and 2004 in the Jerusalem area. The attacks killed 33 people, including several Americans, and wounded more than 450. They have been attributed to the al-Aqsa Martyrs Brigades and Hamas.”

The families contended that late PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and his agents routinely arranged for payments to attackers and to families of attackers who died. But the defendants have said they condemned the attacks, blaming them instead on rogue employees who acted on their own.”

SPB argues that the families have no jurisdiction: "There is no explicit statement that Section 4 shall apply to lawsuits commenced or pending before the enactment of ATCA."

And here is the SPB brief in opposition to the Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit: <https://www.scotusblog.com/wp-content/uploads/2017/05/16-1071BriefInOpposition.pdf>

According to Reuters in 2018,

"The Palestinian Authority and Palestine Liberation Organization gained a legal victory at the U.S. Supreme Court on Monday as the justices refused to consider reinstating a $655.5 million jury award won against them by 11 American families over militant attacks in Israel.

The court declined to hear the families' appeal of a lower court's 2016 ruling throwing out the jury award that was secured in a lawsuit brought under the Anti-Terrorism Act, a law allowing American victims of international terrorism to seek damages in U.S. courts.

The families had looked to hold the Palestinian Authority and PLO liable for six shootings and bombings between 2002 and 2004 in the Jerusalem area that killed 33 people, including several Americans, and wounded more than 450.

"It's outrageous that the murderous Palestinian Authority is allowed to kill innocent civilians and not have to pay any cost. This is a horrible travesty of justice for the families and we will not let it stand," said Nitsana Darshan-Leitner, president of the Shurat HaDin-Israel Law Center, which represents the American families.

The PLO's chief representative in Washington, Husam Zomlot, said in a statement that "this decision reaffirms the vital relationship between the Palestinian and American people, which depends on mutual respect and, as importantly, on respect for the rule of law."

President Donald Trump's administration had sided with the Palestinian Authority and PLO in the dispute, urging the justices not to take up the case because the specific claims could not be brought under the Anti-Terrorism Act."

<https://www.reuters.com/article/us-usa-court-palestinians/u-s-top-court-will-not-revive-verdict-against-palestinian-authority-plo-idUSKCN1H916U>

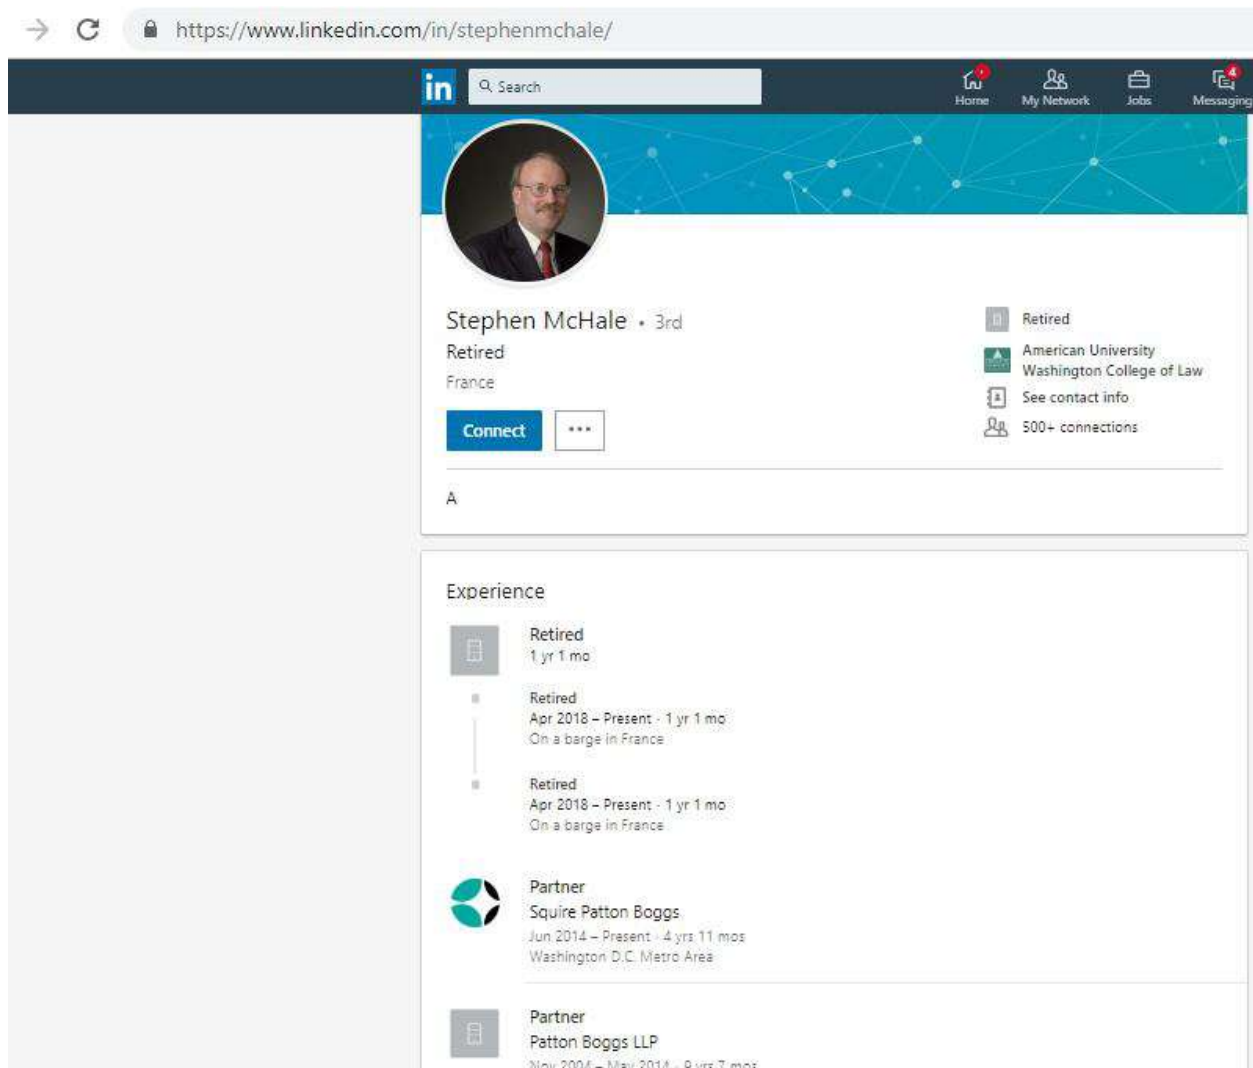

And, from Reuters UK,

Gassan Baloul, a lawyer for the Palestinian defendants, said he was "gratified" that the Supreme Court refused to hear the case. The ruling by the New York-based 2nd U.S. Circuit Court that the high court left in place "respects the constitutional limits on the jurisdiction of U.S. courts," Baloul added.
